Separation Agreement

What is a separation agreement?

A separation agreement is a nuptial agreement made between individuals contemplating separation or who have already separated.

The agreement sets out financial arrangements during the period of separation and how finances should be divided when divorce or dissolution follows.

Do I need a separation agreement?

A separation is not a prerequisite to divorce. However, if you want to issue divorce proceedings based on the fact of two years' separation with consent, or five years' separation, this can be a practical way to regulate finances.

Alternatively, a separation agreement can be used to regulate your finances if you are unable to divorce because you have not been married for a year or there will be some delay before the Court can approve a financial order within divorce proceedings.

If you do not wish to divorce for religious or personal reasons, a separation agreement can help regulate finances whilst separated. Alternatively, you may wish to consider Judicial Separation proceedings.

To view more information on divorce view our Divorce Guide here.

How much does it cost?

This depends on the complexity of the agreement. To obtain an estimate of our charges, please call a member of our Family Team on 0161 941 4000.

What are the benefits of a separation agreement?

A separation agreement can be a helpful first step towards divorce if you are still unsure whether you wish to proceed or do not feel that you are in the right position emotionally to start proceedings. It means you have the potential to reconcile if the separation does not work out.

A separation agreement may assist the couple in working out their solutions to their financial arrangements. However, if the terms of the separation agreement are to be embodied in a financial order in subsequent divorce proceedings, it is important that the terms of the agreement are capable of being approved by a court and are compliant with section 25 of the Matrimonial Causes Act 1975.

A separation agreement is a legal contract. You must intend to enter into a legally binding relationship with your spouse. You must both be separately legally represented, and the terms of the separation agreement must be fair and reasonable. Both parties must disclose their financial position to each other in a comprehensive and transparent way ahead of negotiating terms.

Are there any drawbacks of a separation agreement?

The Family Court retains jurisdiction to divide assets at the time of the divorce, not at the time of separation.

A court is not bound to abide by the terms of a previously negotiated separation agreement, especially if one of the parties was not legally represented, if financial disclosure did not take place or was piecemeal, or the terms of the agreement are in some way unreasonable. For those reasons, it is preferable to divorce rather than to regulate your financial arrangements in a separation agreement.

You also remain legally married, and this could cause issues between parties if one of you begins a new relationship.

Don't just take our word for it...

"Divorce is the worst journey I have ever been on, but I can safely say that having Myerson on side, made it so much easier. Their patience, compassion and professionalism were continuous throughout the two years of my divorce – what an ordeal! I would recommend Myerson in a heartbeat."

"Their response time and communication are excellent, and I would have no hesitation in recommending Myerson in the future."

"The legal team have the rare ability to combine strong legal knowledge, procedural and strategic acumen but delivered with client care and overwhelming compassion in what are often difficult or testing circumstances."

"The team gave me support at a time when I needed it most. I would not hesitate in recommending them to anyone who requires a divorce lawyer."

"Your professionalism, efficiency and pragmatism are admirable."

"From start to finish everything actioned by Myerson was perfect. Nothing was any trouble, no matter how many times I contacted them over matters."
