Our guide to setting up a trust

What is a trust?

A trust is a vehicle where the legal ownership of an asset is separated from the entitlement to the asset.

The legal owners (the trustees) are appointed by the person setting up the trust (the settlor) for the benefit for another party (the beneficiary).

There are many types of trust and the terms can be tailored to suit your individual needs and circumstances.

Why do I need a trust?

There are many reasons why an individual might want to set up a trust including asset protection, saving tax, providing for family members whilst retaining control.

A trust can be set up during the settlor's lifetime which can help to reduce the value of the assets in their estate for Inheritance Tax purposes if certain criteria are met.

A trust can also be set up in a Will so that it only takes effect on death and the settlor has full control and use of those assets during their lifetime.

Trusts are also particularly useful for receiving proceeds from life policies and pensions.

What type of trusts are there?

There are many types of trusts, but for legal purposes, most trusts which are created by deed fall into the following categories:

- a) Bare trusts;
- b) Interest in possession trusts (IIP); and
- c) Discretionary trusts.

Bare trusts

These are trusts where the trustees are simply nominees for the true owner, who can request that the relevant asset is transferred to them outright at any time. They also arise when assets are held for children until they are 18.

Interest in possession trusts

Typically, one person, such as a second spouse, is entitled to the income from the trust fund during their lifetime, but other people, such as the deceased's children, are entitled to the capital when s/he dies.

Discretionary trusts

As the name suggests, these are trusts where payments out of both income and capital are at the discretion of the trustees. The settlor nominates a range of potential beneficiaries but otherwise the trustees have complete discretion as to who gets what, when and how much (if anything).

Who should I appoint as trustee?

Trusts are so-called because the trustees are trusted to look after the asset for the benefit of someone else. It is helpful to have individuals who understand the purpose of your trust and who can work together.

We would always recommend a minimum of 2 trustees and a maximum of 4.

Trustees must act unanimously unless special provision is made for majority voting within the trust deed. Trustees can also be a beneficiary, but this may not be desirable as it could cause a conflict of interest.

An independent trustee can be very useful for a discretionary trust. In some cases, a professional trustee is more suitable.

At Myerson, we have a trust corporation and often act as independent trustee.

Are there any tax consequences of setting up a trust?

The main types of tax to consider when setting up trusts are:

- Inheritance Tax (IHT)
- Capital Gains Tax
- Income Tax

In most cases, trusts set up during someone's life is treated the same for tax purposes. Provided the settlor is not also a beneficiary, a gift into a trust will be a valid gift for IHT purposes and will leave the estate of the settlor after 7 years. There are also ongoing IHT charges to consider if the gift into the trust exceeds the Nil Rate Band (currently £325,000).

Capital Gains and Income Tax are usually also usually levied at the highest rates but can be reclaimed if assets are paid out to beneficiaries who are lower rate taxpayers or those with tax allowances to use up.

For trusts arising on death, the estate is taxed according to its size and (apart from spouse or charity exemption) the tax is the same whether the money is left to individuals outright or to a trust. Thus usually a trust arising on death will not save tax at that stage, but often people choose trusts because of the long term tax savings (the regular 6% charge IHT as against 40% when each generation dies) and the other benefits which trusts bring.

If an IIP trust arises when someone dies, then that person is treated for IHT purposes as if they owned the money in the trust outright. Therefore, if the person with the IIP is the spouse of the deceased, spouse exemption will apply and the gift will be free of IHT. When the person with the IIP dies, the assets are treated as being part of their estate and taxed accordingly. The periodic charge does not apply.
